Gr 6-8-When war breaks out in 1812, the St. Lawrence River becomes a point of connection between the British and Canadians on one bank and the Americans on the other. Jared and Leah Jackson live on the U.S. side. Their father forbids them to see their friend James, who is Canadian. Both Jared and James sign up to serve their respective countries. Their fear, later realized, is that they will one day meet in battle and be forced to shoot at one another. The plot meanders slowly until about halfway through the book when James is badly injured. The Jacksons find him and nurse him back to health, but he then becomes a prisoner of war. Escaping from his American captors, he begins a journey back to his home on the other side of the river. His adventures and close calls make this the most exciting portion of the book. Explanations about the war and the issues involved are placed within the story but are more confusing than enlightening. A chronology of events, a good map, and a glossary attempt to explain the history and unfamiliar terms. However, readers are still likely to finish the story understanding that there was a conflict but not knowing why. The writing has a strained formality about it, and dialogue is stiff. The plot relies heavily on coincidence as James and Jared cross paths at the most convenient times. If readers can wade through the early chapters, they will be rewarded later with some high adventure. However, this is not a first purchase.-Bruce Anne Shook, Mendenhall Middle School, Greensboro, NCCopyright 2001 Cahners Business Information, Inc. --This text refers to an out of print or unavailable edition of this title.

..".the author's greatest strengths are his deft creation of a credible historical world and his compelling plot. Jamie's escape from American soldiers on a boat bound for a Plattsburg war prison is exciting and punctuated with gentle humor."

This book was full of adventures. It takes place during the War of 1812. Three friends, James, Jared and Leah, are forced to see each other as the enemy. As they struggle with the problems of their own country, they struggle with their friendship with James across the river in Canada and Jared with Leah in America. James and Leah are secretly in love with one another and James is also defending his country and Jared defending his. Both afraid that they will fright each other. James soon was taken captured By his friends the Jacksons (Leah and Jared) and now is going to prison camp, telling Jared he will escape. To find out if he does READ THE BOOK!!!!
